

I support full Internet Neutrality, and encourage continued regulation of internet service providers under Title II of FCC regulations. An open internet is important to me, both as a home user, and as a professional. I do not want service providers to have the opportunity to charge more for access to certain sites, or to throttle sites they decide to slow. For my work, the free and open exchange is important: I use and distribute weather data, some from small, independent sites, some internationally.

We have fought this fight, and should not have to fight it again. I am personally offended that a former lawyer for Verizon sees fit to make Net Neutrality an issue again.
